From Halo and Resident Evil to emo apocalypse thriller The Last of Us, video game adaptations are taking over our screens. But is this a fast-track to quality TV - or a cynical cash grab? Keza MacDonald swaps her console for a remote

Game On

For a long time, it was an accepted truth that video games just didn't work on screen. Remember the quasi-cyberpunk 1993 Super Mario movie, starring Dennis Hopper? It was so bad that basically everyone involved with it has disavowed it. And TV? Kids of the 90s will remember the incredibly annoying voice of Sonic the Hedgehog on Saturday morning TV - or the permanent repeats of the Pokémon anime series - but other than that, the entertainment world never took games seriously.

Now, though, things are different. In the past few years, Hollywood has managed to produce a few video-game films that are actually watchable, such as Detective Pikachu and Sonic the Hedgehog 2. And barely a week goes by without an announcement that another game has been picked up for TV - all of which are aimed at adults, not kids or tweens. There's a science fiction series based on Halo, the first-person shooter from 2001 whose original fans are well into their 30s and beyond. There's a Netflix adaptation of Assassin's Creed, the historical action game that makes you run around in elaborate simulations of ancient Egypt or Renaissance Italy - which adds to the streaming giant's 15-rated take on The Witcher, starring Henry Cavill, which is almost as filthy and violent as its source material. And in an Inception-level example of games and TV inspiring each other, there's even a series based on Cuphead, a well-loved but niche run-and-gun game that is itself a homage to early 1920s cartoons.

What has changed? Why is the TV world suddenly so interested in shows based on games? And this time, will they be any good?

The simplest explanation for the boom of game adaptations is, predictably, money. Video games are bigger business than ever before - the games industry was worth $175bn in 2021 (for context, the entire global movie industry is worth $100bn). The audience who play them have also grown up since the Pokémon heyday; 80% of US video game players are over 18 and more than half of them - 52% - are between 18 and 45, the "key demographic" TV executives love most.

"Video games have evolved from a fringe activity to mainstream entertainment, and Netflix is looking to retain and acquire subscribers by plugging into what's popular with younger audiences," says longstanding games industry researcher Joost van Dreunen. "As streaming services compete over content, they look for categories to give them an edge. So HBO and Amazon Prime have been developing game-based series ... When done properly and taken seriously, these adaptations can serve everyone, including the audience."

That last point is crucial: audiences (and critics) can smell it a mile off when a show is a cynical cash-in. Helpfully, the first generations that grew up with games are now in their 40s and 50s and have aged into power: speaking to people in the TV and games industries, it is clear the writers and directors of these new shows are people who actually play games, and genuinely love the source material - such as Supernatural showrunner Andrew Dabb, who is heading up the Netflix Resident Evil series that premieres in July, and says it's his "favourite game of all time". They appreciate video games in all their empowering, exciting and often unintentionally hilarious weirdness. There's a much better chance they'll make TV worth watching.

Nonetheless, when a game gets picked up for TV, the original creative team are often not involved. So the people who spent years creating the game itself - on big-budget projects, the narrative team alone can comprise 10 or 20 people - are usually left sitting nervously on the sidelines. Bruce Straley was the co-creator of Naughty Dog's hard-hitting, critically acclaimed post-apocalyptic game The Last of Us, the tale of a teenage girl called Ellie and her reluctant father figure Joel on a journey across the devastated remnants of America. When The Last of Us was picked up by HBO in 2020, he had mixed feelings.

"Years ago, we used to think that to have a movie made about a game we worked on was 'making it'. I don't think that any more," he says. "Our industry has proven its value and doesn't need other mediums to validate us ... I don't have a problem with adaptations. But in my - and I think all of our - experience, something always falls short with the execution ... I know very little about the production, but it's hard for me to fully endorse it."

This is partly due to the difference between writing for games and for TV. "With The Last of Us, I wanted the player to feel the same feelings Joel and Ellie might be feeling at any given moment," says Straley. "That meant the player had to be 100% there throughout their journey, participating in all the ups and downs, turns and surprises of their survival, and their joys. I believed that taking as much story out of cutscenes [non-interactive sequences] and creating playable scenes instead enabled us to create a significantly more impactful experience than I ever could in a TV show or film. So we have to ask, what makes a game great? And will an adaptation add to the core experience or diminish it?"

The gulf between writing for a linear medium and an interactive one is at the heart of what makes these adaptations so difficult. "With film and TV, every single moment is precious. If something is not in service to the greater narrative, it's gonna get cut," says Sam Winkler, a senior writer at Gearbox Entertainment, creators of the Borderlands series. "In games there's so much more breathing room, and I think that's why the comedy has such a different flavour. In Borderlands we have to be ready for the player to do some weird thing in the middle of the main story, we have to be ready for a joke to pop off at any time, and it has to read well in any situation."

As a result, the best adaptations are often ones that focus on channelling the atmosphere of the original game, rather than obsessing over their plot. "The ones that people have responded well to, like the Castlevania TV series, take the setting and characters and try to give viewers the feeling players had the first time they played these games, without sticking rock-solid to the story," says Winkler. "That's the biggest mistake anyone makes. Of course, it all depends on how something gets greenlit: is it a passion project from someone who played the games and wants to bring it to life? Or an executive noticing that games are making more money than movies saying we gotta get a piece of that? You can always tell when the people behind a project care and understand the source material."

This guarded scepticism is repeated by most people in the games industry - and it's not unwarranted. Game developers, long patronised by the rest of the entertainment industry, wonder what motivation the TV world has to do their stories justice. I hear several stories of painful, tone-deaf pitches from production companies with no idea what a studio's games were about. "One outfit put together a teaser for a proposed adaptation of The Last of Us that was this on-the-nose, B-movie, slasher/horror film," says Straley. "It was so beyond their conception that a post-apocalyptic game could generate genuine emotions."

Admittedly, games have not always had the kind of stories or characters that provoke reflection or empathy. But these days they do - another reason, perhaps, that the TV world is showing more interest. The challenge now is not to wring a good script out of paper-thin plots; it's to honour the genuine emotional connection players feel when they're in a character's shoes, with a gamepad in their hands.

"The awesomest thing and the hardest thing about games is the interactivity," says Straley. "It's so powerful to be able to pull the player into a world and let them craft an experience of their own. I truly believe that there's a different mental wiring, and a different connection, than when we sit in front of a TV. With this power comes a ton of problems for developers. It's one of the hardest mediums to work in, if you care about telling a quality story, and if you really think about what it takes to make a good story in a game, it's pretty baffling that it ever works! But when it does, it's pure magic."

"We have to ask ourselves: what's the purpose of a game-to-screen adaptation? I don't want the lesser version of the game experience - I want something that introduces new fans to what makes that game great." Resident Evil is on Netflix on 14 July; Halo will be on Paramount+ in the summer

A Very British Job Agency

Awful employers, overworked staff, terrible jobs - what it's really like to work in the UK

Joel Golby

One pet peeve of mine is needing to have a complex and nuanced opinion about something, so I am particularly annoyed at Channel 4 this week, who made me do just that. Nobody wants me to do this, Channel 4! Nobody wants me to explore the liminal space between "good" and "bad". And yet, with A Very British Job Agency, I am going to have to! You're going to ruin a lot of people's Saturdays with this!

Anyway, A Very British Job Agency (Monday, 11.05pm, Channel 4). You get it: a three-parter about a British job agency, with larger-than-life characters doing a very normal job in a slightly too enthusiastic way. The running theme of AVBJA is that the employment landscape is in tatters post-Covid and recruitment agencies - labelled the "fourth emergency service" by the narration, a label I can only assume was entirely self-applied - are the only ones brave and talented enough to solve it. If, like me, you started your career by trying to get employment agencies to help you, you will already be laughing.

First, let's start with the good: the two main characters, new-ish couple Sarah (long nails, cool mum, really big set of keys) and Rich (big vape rig, BMW he can't elegantly get out of) are a likable duo whose sex lives I know too much about and whose hearts are in the right places. Sarah comes up against the constant frustrations of young people, new out of school and newer to work, letting her down when she arranges easy first-day lay-ups for them. Rich spends his life phoning factories to see how many of the workers he sent for an induction shift actually turned up. I get it: they want to help people! They are sad that life is leeching out of the local high street! This is a good thing, broadly!

But then the bad: when trying to diagnose the UK's employment issues, we only ever get to hear from embittered would-be employers, who are allowed to do a quick, "The problem with this country is no one wants to get off their arse and work!" to camera without being challenged. A factory boss can't believe no one wants to do a 1am shift at a place you can barely get to without your own car. The boss of a travelling festival doesn't know why young people don't want to schlep to a field to do one five-hour bar shift for no tips. The family who run a campsite want fully trained chefs to work temporarily all summer for minimum wage. What's the problem with this country and work? Is it that nobody wants to get off their arse and work? Is that really all it is?

This series becomes frustrating when a lot of opinions about young people and work are parroted over and over again - "They all want to be TikTok famous!" "Cut off their benefits! Hit 'em where it hurts!" - which overwhelms any attempt to paint a more nuanced picture of the employment landscape as it exists right now. We see a sweet 17-year-old do her first waitressing shift at a too-posh cafe and lose confidence in real time. We see another kid whose will-do attitude gets two thumbs up from Sarah when he first waltzes in, but whose anxiety gets the best of him on his first day. We see a 67-year-old cheerfully working 16-hour days across five jobs because "divorce is expensive", which is heartbreakingly unfair and depressing.

These go some way to showing what trying to get a job is like in the UK right now: how young people's confidence and experienced workers in the hospitality industry have been wrecked by two years of stop-start lockdown; how it's infinitely harder to get employment when you have any sort of history of not being employed; how employers want you to throw yourself against the rocks of shiftwork for the absolute least amount of money they can get away with. But why aren't people in work? Repeat it like a panto audience: because nobody wants to get off their arse!

The problem isn't this series, exactly, but the fact that it shows a deeply infuriating social problem without any solution at all, then lets British people give their opinions about it, which are literally always wrong. Maybe it isn't that nuanced, actually: it's a good-enough TV show that makes me hate every single employer in this country. There. I've figured it out. Happy Saturday.

The problem with this show is that it lets British people give their opinions, which are literally always wrong

Pick of the week
Noughts + Crosses
Tuesday, 10.40pm,
BBC One

Since we were introduced to Malorie Blackman's alternative world on screen - where white people ("noughts") are governed by the ruling Black class ("crosses") - there has been a pandemic and a historic point of momentum in the Black Lives Matter movement. The return of this reverse-race series couldn't feel more timely. It picks up with star-crossed lovers Callum (Jack Rowan) and Sephy (Masali Baduza) making plans to leave Albion for good - but Sephy's disappearance has triggered more unrest. Fans of the novels may predict what happens over the four-episode run, but Blackman has teased that there are some surprise changes from the tale they know. Hollie Richardson

Saturday

Pick of the day
Killing Eve

9.15pm, BBC One
 When Phoebe Waller-Bridge's gloriously naughty thriller launched in 2018, it was one of the freshest new dramas in years. That's why, regardless of the largely criticised direction it went in, fans need to tune into the finale to find out how the story of obsession and gore ends for Villanelle and Eve. It opens with the pair on the road (debating which of them is the biggest psychopath), making their way to face Carolyn. Though the biggest question we need answering is: will they, won't they? HR

Romeo & Duet
7pm, ITV

Picky singleton River wants to find a boyfriend who is at least 6ft 3in and looks like an NBA player. So he's chosen to try to find love on this dating show where fellow single contestants attempt to win him over with a karaoke performance. First up: Phil, with an exuberant rendition of Mika's smash hit Grace Kelly. HR

TOTP: The Story of 1996
8pm, BBC Two

Tonight's 90s music deep dive transports us back to the year of Girl Power, with the Spice Girls making their first TOTP performance (recorded live in Japan). Ronan Keating also tells

Killing Eve, Sat

Grace, Sun

how Boyzone usurped Take That, and Peter Andre recalls shirt-ripping on stage. HR

A Lake District Farm Shop
8.15pm, Channel 4

Scenery lust is guaranteed with another look at this idyllic way of life, full of outdoor swimming, sheep milking and a daily commute to the barn. It's not short on drama, though: there is a tense brie critique at the farm shop and a rush to make 7,000 portions of luxury butter at Winter Tarn Dairy. Hannah Verdier

Hidden
9pm, BBC Four

The final season of the Welsh drama reaches its rainy climax, as the truth about Siôn and Glyn's past unravels. But the real draw is DCI Cadi (Sian Reese-Williams, who anchors this gloomy but heartfelt show) and her complicated relationships in the community. How will she say her goodbyes? Henry Wong

Pick of the day

Grace

8pm, ITV

The murky and intense adaptation of Peter James's crime novels, set against the gusty Brighton coastline, returns for a second season. John Simm is back as DS Roy Grace, who believes the body of a former teacher and the finding of human remains are linked - the work of a sadistic serial killer who leaves a bizarre calling card at the scene of each crime. Down the road in Hove, a man finds a pen drive on the train that ends up getting him involved in the investigation and worrying for the lives of his wife and child. HR

Our Changing Planet
7pm, BBC One

An ambitious project with six threatened, changing habitats around the world tracked across seven years. We begin with Steve Backshall visiting the dazzlingly beautiful and minutely ecologically balanced coral reefs of the Maldives. A decent balance of righteous eco-polemic and nature celebration. Phil Harrison

Gentleman Jack

9pm, BBC One

There has not been much of a honeymoon period for our Yorkshire newlyweds, and now Anne (the masterful Suranne Jones) finds herself distracted. First up is a business opportunity: the railway has arrived in town and Anne is curious. Then there's the matter of an increasingly forlorn Mariana, who wants to talk. HW

Idris Elba's Fight School

9pm, BBC Two

Tonight's tense episode leads to the big day, as Elba's boxing proteges face their first sparring in the ring - and he has no qualms about sending home anybody who isn't up to it. With a lack of focus and fitness among the group during training, is it already the end for some of them? HR

SAS: Who Dares Wins

9pm, Channel 4

We're halfway through the SAS selection process, and the remaining recruits are facing their most brutal challenges yet: a seven-metre backwards dive; hand-to-hand combat in a game of murderball, to test their aggression and strength; and an ambush while out driving. No surprise that four recruits will hand in their armbands before the credits roll. AC

Brothers in Dance: Anthony and Kel Matsena

10.20pm, BBC Four

Next month, charismatic and cutting-edge choreographer siblings Anthony and Kel Matsena debut their production Shades of Blue/Warrior Queens at Sadler's Wells in London. This documentary tracks their journey as they rehearse for a work inspired by the Black Lives Matter movement. HR

Monday

Pick of the day

Peacock

10pm, BBC Three

From People Just Do Nothing writers Steve Stamp and Ben Murray, this three-part comedy follows Andy Peacock (Allan Mustafa) - a slightly unbearable thirtysomething personal trainer who can't understand why dates aren't impressed by his selfies and bravado. But beneath all that, he is constantly fretting over his single status, lack of career progression and being left behind in his friendship group. The opening episode sees Andy's trip after taking hallucinogens. HR

The Split

9pm, BBC One

Hannah and Christie spend the episode prancing around London hand in hand like Danny and Sandy in the opening titles of Grease. Meanwhile, Zander discovers that Tyler has been up to no good, but Nina is oblivious to her lover's misdeeds. HR

Navalny

9pm, BBC Two

Vladimir Putin hates him so much that he literally refuses to say his name. But still, somehow, Alexei Navalny remains both alive (albeit imprisoned) and fiercely critical of the Russian president. This extraordinary film - which frequently feels more like a thriller than a documentary - tells the story of Navalny's almost suicidally courageous one-man war against corruption. PH

Bling Ring: Hollywood Heist
10pm, Channel 4

This three-part documentary (showing daily) speaks to the culprits of the wild Hollywood heist in which a group of teenagers - dubbed the Bling Ring - stole more than $3m-worth of possessions from celebrities such as Paris Hilton and Lindsay Lohan - using intel from paparazzi sites and social media. HR

Imagine: Miriam Margolyes - Up for Grabs
10.40pm, BBC One

From Blackadder's Queen Victoria to Professor Sprout in the Harry Potter movies, there's nothing not to love about Miriam Margolyes. With a reputation for being outspoken, the 80-year-old is a treat of a subject for Alan Yentob's interview. Fellow thespians including Richard E Grant, Charles Dance and Vanessa Redgrave are on hand to talk about her brilliance. HV

Tuesday

Pick of the day
Life After Life
9pm, BBC Two

Now a teenager, Ursula has been seeing a psychiatrist to help with her dark thoughts. She forms a friendship with her wayward aunt Izzie (fabulously played by Jessica Brown Findlay) who lives in London and writes a column called Adventures of a Modern Spinster. But the fun and games quickly stop when Ursula calls on her aunt for help after a traumatic event on her 16th birthday. HR

Derry Girls
9pm, Channel 4

This sitcom was brilliant from the start and has improved with age, as well-honed characters allow more gags to be packed in. Also tightly packed are the sandwiches to be taken to Barry's amusement park: a red letter day for the Quinns, so long as nobody misses the train. Jack Seale

Julia
9pm, Sky Atlantic

The deliciously warm drama continues, with Julia (Sarah Lancashire) and her TV team having to find inventive ways to reshoot a ruined roll of videotape. Cue a chicken recipe being made with a suspicious cut of meat, and Paul being tasked with baking French bread for the first time. HR

Smother
9pm, Alibi

How many secrets can one family harbour? Well, more are about to burst out of the closet as the Irish drama continues. Val (the fabulously matriarchal Dervla Kirwan) gets an ultimatum from Jenny. Meanwhile, the family learn a lot more about Finn, the bonus member who has been puzzling them ever since he turned up. HV

Hullraisers

9.35pm, Channel 4

In tonight's episode of the cracking Hull-based comedy: Paula is rushed into hospital after a lasagne disaster; Rana - who doesn't like kids - looks after her new boyfriend's unimpressed daughter; and Toni accidentally comes into possession of a Gucci coat. HR

Wednesday

Pick of the day

Tan France: Beauty and the Bleach
9pm, BBC Two

Queer Eye's Tan France is one of the most uplifting personalities on television - but this great documentary explores his battle with colourism while growing up in Doncaster. Unsurprisingly, his sweet nature brings out some candid moments in interviews with others who have also faced colourism, such as Kelly Rowland, Bunmi Mojekwu and a class of teenagers. France then heads home to Yorkshire to face up to the constant shame that led him to bleach his own skin when he was a boy. HR

HMS Pinafore Opera With ENO
7pm, Sky Arts

For anyone who loved the final performance in Anyone Can Sing, here's the opera they starred in (this time it's been left to the professionals - including, err, Les Dennis). The satirical tale of love and honour has a farcical finale. HR

The Great British Sewing Bee
8pm, BBC One

Series eight of the stitch-off has a few notable alterations: Sara Pascoe is now officially installed as host, and the whole sewing kit and caboodle has relocated from London to a Leeds woollen mill. Judges Patrick Grant and Esme Young provide a thread of continuity, ready to run the rule over 12 hopefuls. Graeme Virtue

Raised By Wolves
9pm, Sky Atlantic

A gnarly attack on Paul - by way of a deadly mouse - scatters everyone at Marcus's hideout. Campion seeks out Mother for help, while Decima and Vrille do their best to stop him. It's impossible to predict what's going to happen in this sci-fi venture, but its far-out storytelling keeps things intriguing. HW

Inside No 9
10pm, BBC Two

Mr Curtis has just arrived in rural Wales from London to take over Mr King's class ("They pay over £2 for a coffee don't they? Dear me, imagine that!" declares the headteacher). But when Mr Curtis does some digging on his predecessor, he can't seem to find any details ... HR

Thursday

Pick of the day

Where Have All the Lesbians Gone?
10.30pm, Channel 4

Directed by Brigid McFall, with help from photographer Vic Lentaigne, this collection of intimate and often funny interviews examines what it means to be a lesbian today and questions why so many young women prefer to identify as queer rather than lesbian. Comics Rosie Jones and Jen Brister share their views, along with a range of folks including a great-grandmother, a poet and a dental nurse. HR

Rebuilding Notre Dame: The Next Chapter
8pm, BBC Two

It has been three years since images of a burning Notre Dame at the heart of Paris saddened the world. Within that time there has been a mammoth mission to rebuild one of the planet's most famous and historic buildings. Lucy Worsley meets the people putting it back together. HR the Homes for Ukraine scheme, but - as of 7 April - only 1,200 refugees had arrived in the UK with visas. Paul Brand investigates criticism that the government has not helped those fleeing fast enough. HR

Art That Made Us
9pm, BBC Two

"Once you behold the king, everything changes." The handsomely highbrow series that examines UK history through the prism of culture lands on the Stuart period, a time of political unrest and civil war. That means actor Anton Lesser channelling Satan in Paradise Lost and intriguing cameos from some modern political bogeymen. GV

Julia Bradbury: Breast Cancer and Me
9pm, ITV

"When you announce to the wider world you have cancer, it instantly puts you in a vulnerable position," says Julia Bradbury as she documents her diagnosis and preparations for her mastectomy. The film's raw power comes from seeing the usually private and composed presenter face her fears, alone and with her family. HV

Rob & Romesh vs Strongman
9pm, Sky Max

The formulaic but entertaining series which exploits the chemistry (and childish competitiveness) of Romesh Ranganathan and Rob Beckett as they investigate various pursuits returns. Tonight, this pair of mighty physical specimens tackle a strongman contest as they visit Iceland to train with former World's Strongest Man Magnús Ver Magnússon. PH

Friday

Pick of the day

Here We Go
8.30pm, BBC One

Written by Bafta-nominated Tom Basden, this family sitcom is a welcome addition to the Friday night primetime schedule. It follows a year in the life of the Jessops as filmed with a handheld camera by the youngest son. The superb cast bring the family's everyday mundanities to life: Katherine Parkinson as the rage-prone mum Rachel; Jim Howick as the people-pleasing dad Paul; and Alison Steadman as the interfering grandma Sue. The opening episode sees them attempt a day out at Jungle World. HR

Unreported World
7.30pm, Channel 4

Krishnan Guru-Murthy is on the streets of St Louis to speak to a handful of the thousands of people who are part of "addicted America" - the fentanyl epidemic that has seen a huge increase in opioid overdoses. A dealer who makes thousands of dollars per day and a pastor who fears for his community are among those he talks to. HR

Richard Hammond's Crazy Contraptions
8pm, Channel 4

A new role for Hammond: mad inventor. He gathers engineers to build chain-reaction contraptions - in the style of Rube Goldberg machines - for everyday tasks. This week's noble challenge is to let our host make his bed from the comfort of the bathtub. HW

It'll Be Alright on the Night
9pm, ITV

Continuing its gentle, cock-up heavy entertainment, tonight's highlights from the ITV staple include: Michael McIntyre experiencing the trauma of launching a brand new gameshow, and Joanna Lumley struggling with a busy road in India. PH

Not Going Out
9.30pm, BBC One

Open House: The Great Sex Experiment
10pm, Channel 4

Behind those swinging doors: this week, curious new arrivals L'Oreal and Kalid want to believe that sleeping with other people could actually strengthen their bond but - like those who went before them - are they prepared for the potential fallout? GV

WHAT'S ON Streaming

Pick of the week
Gaslit
StarzPlay, from Sunday

A lawless political party, cut adrift from morality and plumbing the depths to cling to power? Dan Stevens (who plays Republican aide turned prosecution witness John Dean) has already drawn a parallel between Richard Nixon's Watergate administration, the subject of this eight-part series, and the current UK government. Even if it wasn't so timely, this drama would still be a striking warning from history. It's a fresh angle on familiar material, with Julia Roberts as Martha Mitchell - the wife of Nixon's corrupt attorney general John (Sean Penn), who helped blow the whistle on the scandal and suffered grievously as a result (namely kidnap and sedation). It's bleak but often darkly funny. Phil Harrison

Swimming With Sharks

The Roku Channel, out now
Based on the 1994 film of the same name, here's a slightly ridiculous but guiltily good-looking drama starring Diane Kruger, Kiernan Shipka and Donald Sutherland. It follows the seemingly naive Lou (Shipka) as she interns at a company run by Hollywood hotshot Joyce (Kruger) - the kind of bad boss who would throw a Louboutin heel at her assistant. But things take a sinister turn when it is revealed that Lou has actually been obsessed with Joyce for quite a while, and she's been outsmarting the people around her to get to this point ... Hollie Richardson

Dollface

Disney+, from Wednesday
Kat Dennings returns in a second season of this comedy about female millennial manners. Since we last brunched, the girls have navigated a pandemic - which has sharpened their need to make Big Life Decisions. Cue scatty business plans, a search for mentors and, of course, dream sequences involving a digital feline spirit guide. Many of the characters feel as if they've been fed through a camera filter - which is almost certainly a comment on the Instagramming of life - but it sometimes deprives the show of much that feels authentically human. PH

Ten Percent

Amazon Prime Video, from Thursday
A British remake of the wonderfully snarky French comedy Call My Agent!, written by Twenty Twelve and W1A creator John Morton. The humour feels subtly different and neatly reflective of national difference; here the comic emphasis is on bathos and quiet desperation. In common with the French version, it's overflowing with celebrity cameos (Helena Bonham Carter, David Oyelowo and a satisfyingly stropky Kelly Macdonald). The long-suffering agents are headed by Jack Davenport's Jonathan. PH

Shining Girls

Apple TV+, from Friday

After a vicious attack left her too traumatised to continue her career as a journalist, Kirby Mazrachi (Elisabeth Moss) has been quietly trying to put her life back together when a fresh murder is linked to her assault. Might she be the only survivor of many similar attacks? This adaptation of Lauren Beukes's novel sees Kirby join forces with Wagner Moura's journalist Dan Velazquez as she attempts to uncover the truth. What unfolds is a dizzying, existential horror story, apparently traversing many parallel eras and realities. Or is this temporal chaos simply a manifestation of Kirby's disturbed state? PH

Ozark

Netflix, from Friday

There's plenty to sort out as this brutally tense crime drama concludes with the second part of the final series. The Byrde family have gone entirely rogue, with both children deeply involved in the family business. How will the conflict between Wendy (Laura Linney) and Jonah (Skylar Gaertner) resolve itself? And will Adam Rothenberg's ex-cop Mel team up with Maya (Jessica Frances Dukes) to bring the family down? Ozark addicts can soothe their withdrawal process with a documentary, A Farewell to Ozark, which drops simultaneously. PH

Grace and Frankie

Netflix, from Friday

The charming comedy-drama, which showcases two older female leads (and is Netflix's longest-running series), gets the conclusion it deserves. Grace and Frankie thrives on the natural chemistry between long-term, real-life besties Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin who play an odd couple (a prim career woman and a former hippie), given new leases of life by the end of their marriages. "The reality," says Frankie, "is that one of us is going to lose the other." This hints at sadness ahead, but the pair will surely rage furiously against the dying of the light. PH

Natasha Lyonne roars again and Coogan tackles #MeToo

Russian Doll Netflix ★★★★★

The first season of Russian Doll was one of the best comedies of 2019. It followed the trials and troubles of Nadia (Natasha Lyonne), who kept dying after her 36th birthday party, only to find herself reincarnated at the same party, doomed to relive her death day again and again. The second season deals with the matter of time as Nadia approaches her 40th birthday. Lyonne is mesmerising as she lobs out erudite riffs on anything from hospital waiting rooms to her inability to give up smoking. The supporting cast, including Chloë Sevigny as her mentally ill mother Lenora, and Elizabeth Ashley as Nadia's substitute mother, Ruth, are excellent. If the first season was about how not to die, the second is about how to live. If that doesn't sound amusing, well, it still manages to be. Rebecca Nicholson

Chivalry Channel 4/All 4 ★★★★☆

This very funny drama, co-written by and co-starring Steve Coogan and Sarah Solemani, grew out of the duo's sparring over feminism and the need for change when they were working on the film Greed as the #MeToo movement began to break. Coogan plays Cameron O'Neill, a fairly (one imagines) typical film producer (dates his twentysomething ex-assistants, sleeps with leading ladies, knows he's being left behind but doesn't know how to adapt); Solemani is the indie darling brought in to detoxify a project poisoned by its European old-guard director. It's a quality, precision-engineered piece of work by a duo with extraordinary chemistry. Unlike any of Cameron's former assistants and most of his leading ladies, viewers have no cause for complaint. Lucy Mangan

The Thief, His Wife and the Canoe ITV/ITV Hub ★★★★☆

Would you go along with your husband's plan to fake his death and live behind a wardrobe? In The Thief, His Wife and the Canoe, the droll dramatisation of a real-life insurance scam, Chris Lang imagines how John (and Anne) Darwin did just that. In 2002, the former teacher paddled a canoe up the coast from his home in County Durham, faked his death and hid out. His wife reported him missing, lied to their two sons and claimed life insurance. Lang tells the story from Anne's perspective, which serves to make her more sympathetic than her man-baby spouse. The big question it asks is why Anne went along with her marital muppet's plan to mug off the authorities and live off ill-gotten gains for so long. Stuart Jeffries

Life After Life BBC Two/iPlayer ★★★★☆

Ursula Todd can't stop dying. That's the premise of this devastating drama, which documents its protagonist's many demises. Born to a wealthy family in 1910, Ursula dies almost instantly, strangled by her umbilical cord. And then, suddenly, she is back, being born, and doing it all over again. If you like being overwhelmed by vicarious trauma then you're in for a treat. It does a brilliant job of making period archetypes seem three-dimensional, thanks to the stellar cast: Jessica Hynes, Fleabag's Sian Clifford and Jessica Brown Findlay. But Ursula never gets close to unravelling a purpose behind her predicament. "I don't know why we live - all we do is die," she mourns on a blitz deathbed of rubble and dust towards the end of the series, still completely mystified. Rachel Aroesti

Pick of the week

Sleep Sound With Jamie Dornan Audible, all episodes out now

Some might argue that listening to Jamie Dornan's voice on a snooze-inducing podcast is something of a waste. A very sexy waste. But Dornan's deep, Northern Irish tones transport you to a Mexico beach and a desert storm, complete with swooshy sound effects, as he works his sleepy witchcraft - and it does work. With six episodes to choose from, this is definitely not one to listen to in the middle of a meeting. Hannah Verdier

Typecast Widely available, episodes weekly

Here's a fun game: casting novels (mainly romcoms) for the big screen. From Rare Birds Book Club, each episode hears Rachel, Roxane and Flo (pictured, right) dive into a book and make a passionate case for who should play the characters - while asking big questions such as: "Which Hollywood Chris is the hottest?" This season: The Love Hypothesis and 50 Shades of Grey. Hollie Richardson

Very Scary People Widely available, all eps out now

True-crime fans can binge every episode of this no-holds-barred retelling of the mass murder in Amityville and its subsequent ghostly legend. Host Donnie Wahlberg takes listeners back to a very grisly corner of 1974, where the DeFeo family were found dead in their beds. It's graphic, so not for the faint-hearted. HV

Will Be Wild Widely available, episodes weekly

Was the 6 January insurrection just a practice run for a bigger protest?

Trump Inc's Andrea Bernstein and Ilya Marritz take an in-depth look at the attackers, the people who tried to prevent it and the victims of that violent day. Hearing a teenager make the difficult decision to tip off the FBI about his father's behaviour is particularly chilling. HV

Tiffany Dover Is Dead NBC News, episodes weekly

Nurse Tiffany Dover fainted on camera after having her Covid jab, fuelling a frenzy of anti-vaxxers who claimed she'd died (despite the fact that she got up again.) NBC News reporter Brandy Zadrozny investigates how the conspiracy theory spread, particularly after Dover disappeared off social media, fanning those misinformation flames. HV

Radio

Macbeth Sat, 3pm, Radio 4

The witches' wobbly voices sound a little like Doctor Who villains, but such comparisons are soon put aside as David Tennant (pictured, above) takes on the scheming Scottish king with assurance. Clive Brill's nimble production gives Tennant the chance to show us everyman charm before dark ambition takes over, a vulpine growl as the possibilities form in the hero general's mind, and a piercing mania when Macbeth frantically tries to rationalise his despicable actions. At times you can almost hear the baring of his teeth. Jack Seale

Sunday Night Is Music Night Sun, 7pm, Radio 2

This weekend, Radio 2 says "Happy 80th Birthday Babs!", with no less than three Streisand-themed programmes. At 2am on Saturday night, Barbra Streisand at the BBC presents an archive of songs and interviews; followed at 4am by Barbra Streisand: From the Way We Were - to the Way We Are, in which she chats to lyricist Don Black - and this, in which Richard E Grant hosts a celebration of her music, performed by the BBC Concert Orchestra. Wonderful. Ali Catterall

Lady Killers With Lucy Worsley Wed, 11.30am, Radio 4

How can the modern, feminist lens illuminate the crimes of Victorian women? Worsley does a great job of retelling the story of Florence Bravo who was accused of poisoning her husband. With jealousy, heavy drinking and an even heavier expectation of wifely "duties" after two miscarriages, she also finds evidence of abuse. The unfairness piles up as historian Rosalind Crone describes the all-male inquest that ripped apart Bravo's background. Hannah Verdier

Emo Forever Fri, 1am, 6 Music

The Friday midnight slot on 6 Music has traditionally been occupied by Indie Forever, an hour-long mix of road-tested anthems capable of filling any student union dancefloor (with the occasional guest compiling the playlist). This spin-off repeats the formula but leans into emo and pop-punk, from Dashboard Confessional to Taking Back Sunday. The first instalment is available on BBC Sounds now; this week, emo archivist Olivia V from hip Instagram account @indiesleaze is at the helm. Graeme Virtue

Pick of the week
Calm With Horses
Wednesday, 9pm,
Film4

Three exceptional young actors carry Nick Rowland's brooding tale of restricted horizons and brutal circumstance in rural Ireland. Cosmo Jarvis is a hulking presence as Arm, an ex-boxer now subsisting as the muscle for his friend/boss Dymrna (Barry Keoghan), a junior member of a violent criminal family. Arm has an autistic son with Niamh Algar's Ursula, but she hates what he has become and is keen to escape her insular, backwater life. Jarvis gives a superbly measured performance, seemingly punch-drunk and pliable but with a maelstrom of emotion swirling just below the surface. A stark drama whose tragedy is made all the sadder by its glimmers of hope. Simon Wardell

Funny Girl

Saturday, 2.05pm, BBC Two
 "So she looks a bit off balance / She possesses golden talents." Bob Merrill's lyrics are as much a description of the film's lead, Barbra Streisand, as its subject, Fanny Brice - the Jewish New York performer who became a star with the Zeigfeld Follies in the early 20th century. In William Wyler's sumptuous 1968 musical, Streisand (in her Oscar-winning film debut) owns the screen, committed to Brice's comic pratfalls but capable of belting out the big, heartfelt numbers. Omar Sharif makes for an interesting contrast as her beau, suave gambler Nick. SW

Looper

Saturday, 9pm, Great! Movies
 With the sad news of Bruce Willis's retirement, here's a tribute in the form of Rian Johnson's cunning 2012 sci-fi thriller, which offers two Bruces for the price of one ... sort of. Joseph Gordon-Levitt plays Joe, an assassin in 2044 who kills people sent back in time by his mob bosses from 2074 - when time travel has been invented. If his sardonic smirk and smudged nose look familiar, that's because he is the youthful version of Willis's character, not yet burdened by real love and loss. But when old Joe materialises as his next hit, young Joe faces a mortal dilemma. SW

The Ox-Bow Incident

Wednesday, 3.15pm, Talking Pictures TV
 One of Clint Eastwood's favourite films, William A Wellman's tightly plotted 1942 western has a moral complexity that would fit well beside its star Henry Fonda's later 12 Angry Men. Fonda plays a cowboy who is swept up in a town's inchoate rage following rumours of rustling and murder. A mob mentality quickly takes hold and a lynching party is formed, but when the supposed criminals are tracked down, doubts form as to exactly whose justice is being served. A sobering story about what happens when emotion trumps reason. SW

Mr Blandings Builds His Dream House

Thursday, 9pm, BBC Four
 Continuing the channel's season of RKO pictures, HC Potter's 1948 comedy gives us Cary Grant in his prime. His trademark impotent indignation is in full force as a New York ad executive, living with his family in a cramped flat, whose new fixer-upper in rural Connecticut turns into a big ol' money pit. Physical comedy and marital strife (with Myrna Loy's patient wife) ensue, with Melvyn Douglas getting all the best lines as their wittily exasperated best friend and reluctant lawyer. SW

The Toll

Friday, Amazon Prime Video
 Michael Smiley's softly spoken toll-booth operator doesn't seem that interesting. But when a figure from his dark past bumps into him accidentally, his hush-hush criminal operation in a remote corner of Pembrokeshire is brought to the attention of the area's one honest copper (Annes Elwy). Ryan Andrew Hooper's comic twist on the spaghetti western offers an array of Ealing-esque eccentrics (female Elvis impersonator; triplet robbers; paramedic/dogging devotee) but it's the more underplayed scenes between Smiley and Elwy that give the enterprise its necessary depth. SW

Cape Fear

Friday, 10.40pm, BBC One
 Martin Scorsese's 1991 film is a brash, steroid-pumped remake of J Lee Thompson's Hitchcock-inspired thriller. A noble Gregory Peck from the original is swapped for a flawed Nick Nolte as lawyer Sam Bowden, whose intentionally bad defence of psychopathic rapist Max Cady comes back to haunt him when the criminal is released and seeks bloody vengeance. Robert De Niro takes the Robert Mitchum role and adds muscle and sweaty menace to the violence, while the blurring of the boundaries between the men gives a modern touch to the genre stylings. SW

HALO SPRING CLEAN SALE EVENT
LOWEST EVER PRICE SAVE OVER 30%

MUST END
 30TH APRIL

At last.
 A cordless vacuum with

REAL OOMPH!

Ultra-light yet with the suction power of a full-size corded.

Halo | Capsule | TM

Cordless is a great idea, the ability to move about the house freely without the restraint of a cord or the weight of a heavy vacuum. Except, up until now, cordless vacuums have all suffered from one thing. Just not enough oomph in the suction power department.

The Halo Capsule is different.

Ultra-light thanks to its unique carbon fibre construction, the Halo weighs just 2.6kg yet has the equivalent suction power of a full-size vacuum. It won't quit on you half way through your cleaning either. The Halo keeps on going for over 60 minutes* before needing recharging. When combined with its huge 1.6L capacity, it means you can now deep clean the whole house in just one go. Try doing that with any other cordless or with such speed and ease using a corded. And when you've finished, the Halo's Dust Pouch enables you to get rid of the dirt without the usual cloud of dust and mess.

"This vacuum scored 100% in all our tests."

"The Halo is nothing short of fantastic at cleaning."
